Montana Department of Corrections

Our Mission

The Montana Department of Corrections enhances public safety, promotes positive change in offender behavior, reintegrates offenders into the community and supports victims of crime.

About 1,200 inmates walk out of the gates of Montana prisons each year, usually making their way back to the communities they left when sentenced. How well-prepared they are to successfully return to society determines their ability to lead productive, law-abiding lives, create no new victims and avoid rebounding into the corrections system.

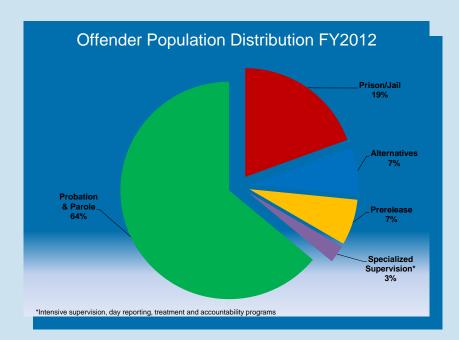

In the past two years, the Montana Department of Corrections launched a concerted effort to improve and expand programs and services designed to give adult offenders greater chances for success when no longer in prison.

Reentry refers to this transition from incarceration and to the programs aimed at helping. Although the concept of reentry has been a part of corrections for decades, the term is relatively new and is the subject of national recognition that more can be done to reduce recidivism rates that drive up correctional costs and consume scarce taxpayer dollars.

Success for offenders means having stable housing and employment, effective treatment, positive personal relationships, family support and appropriate supervision. Success means fewer future victims, less crime and a safer Montana.

The Montana Reentry Initiative has a single goal: Use a more focused effort to increase offenders' success. A task force began work in the summer of 2011 to increase coordination of corrections system efforts with those of other government agencies and community partners. The task force is working with the Department of Labor and Industry, Department of Public Health and Human Services, higher education, faith-based groups, law enforcement, families, employers and landlords to craft a blueprint that reduces recidivism.

The initiative targets those offenders who pose the greatest risk of returning to prison. Release preparation efforts begin the day these offenders enter prison and continue throughout incarceration.

The department believes these efforts will reduce recidivism, save Montana taxpayers money and transform lives from those where criminal action is commonplace and problems go unresolved, to lives that contribute daily to a vibrant and healthy society and make Montana a safer place to live for all.

2011-12

2011-12 in review

- Saw a 19 percent decline in the number of juvenile offenders supervised by the department during the past two years and a 35 percent decrease since 2006
- Launched the Montana Reentry Initiative, a statewide project to improve coordination of government and community services and programs that provide offenders with tools to be successful when returning to their communities
- In conjunction with the Department of Labor and Montana State University Billings, implemented the New Path New Life reentry program in Billings, assisting female offenders in four key areas of transitioning to the community
- Obtained for the Montana State Prison infirmary accreditation by the National Commission on Correctional Health Care, which sets standards for correctional health care nationwide
- Expanded the crime victim notification system to track offenders on probation and parole and to provide text messages to victims
- Successfully implemented a new felony restitution collection and disbursement system, allowing victims the ability to have payments deposited directly into their account rather than wait for a check to be issued
- Expanded the Pine Hills garden production for the school lunch program to include a high-production greenhouse, with excess food donated to the local food bank
- Expanded the inmate trust account system to include transactions in any state-run or contracted secure facility, providing continuity throughout the system for all • offenders and preventing delays in receipt of funds when inmates are transferred to another facility
- Completed development of an infirmary in Lewistown that is a collaborative effort between corrections and the Department of Public Health and Human Services to house 25 offenders with serious physical and medical conditions, and allow an increase in the capacity of Montana State Prison
- Managed an inmate fire crew that provided more than 3,500 hours of community service and 613 hours of wildland firefighting in fiscal years 2011 and 2012

- Despite the end of a federal grant, maintained specialized probation and parole officers focusing on Native American offenders and those with co-occurring mental health and addiction problems, reducing violations among those populations
- Assisted 135 incarcerated offenders with post-secondary education, with five obtaining associate degrees and 10 getting welding certificates from two different community colleges
- Completed renovation of an antiquated cell block into the Security Services Unit at Montana State Prison, including redesign of the interior and addition of new windows, boilers, lighting and insulated siding
- Completed Pine Hills candidacy to become a member of Performance-based Standards for Youth Correction and Detention Facilities, and focused on facility improvement using best practices and validated research as a guide
- Conducted 10 American Indian cultural awareness training courses for correctional staffs in state and contracted facilities
- Provided an Internet-based registration system allowing victims to register electronically to track offenders under department supervision
- Improved the community corrections division's communication process and expedited the screening process of our offenders by using a new program that sends offender information packets electronically over the Internet to all community-based facilities
- Continued working with Montana State University Billings to provide post-secondary and life skills education at Montana Women's Prison, with 84 offenders completing the life skills curriculum and 10 finishing credit course work
- Completed development of a garden and greenhouse at Montana Women's Prison that will provide food for the prison and save about $2,000 a year
- In conjunction with the Montana Correctional Association, made the department's reentry initiative the focus of the organization's annual conference.

Montana's emphasis on developing correctional options to prison has had an impact during the past seven years. Alternatives, such as sanction and treatment programs, saw a 48 percent growth in population, while the number of offenders in prerelease centers increased more than 28 percent and the community supervision population climbed 9 percent. At the same time, the number of male inmates changed less than 1 percent and the female prison population dropped nearly 17 percent.

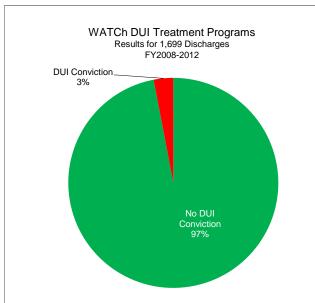

Montana's adjudicated juveniles are being placed in secure facilities in smaller numbers. The total number of youths entering Montana's two secure juvenile facilities decreased 17.6 percent in the past three years. The number of new commitments dropped nearly 23 percent, while the number of juveniles admitted due to parole revocations fell 13 percent.
